Good Evening.

ROSEMARY

When Rosemary says, "Hello!"
In the sweetest voice I know.
Happiness doth overflow.
When Rosemary says, "Hello!"

When Rosemary smiles at me.
I'm as happy as can be.
Fact is clouds are hard to see.
When Rosemary smiles at me.

When Rosemary says, "Good-bye!"
I feel sad; guess you know why.
Sunshine quickly leaves the sky.
When Rosemary says, "Good-bye!"

—J. A. B.

Billy Hough was in Waterbury the other day. Perhaps you know him and yet it may be he was just a little ahead of your time. But Old Waterbury knows him, just the same, especially the various ones among us who at some time or another during the past 50 years worked or were employed at the Watch company plant, either in the days of its name as the Waterbury Watch Co., or later when it was conducted as the New England Watch Company. Oh, what an institution it was to the people of Waterbury. Popular and fair-minded foremen like the late J. J. McDonald and Jim Freney were part of the outfit with the genial Ed Hart, still holding forth in Rochester, as one of the guiding lights of the concern. And the girls! Gee, but weren't they a popular lot of young ladies. Handsomely dressed and good looking, they were indeed a wonderful asset for the concern. No wonder visitors to town always wanted to visit the Watch company. The girls were never "tied down". They could look up and smile just as often as they liked without fear of having their pay cut. But why go into details. The whole thing is too sad to think of now with the old shop abandoned and the institution out of commission. But Billy Hough's appearance in the center made the Tall Tower man think of the old days. Mr. Hough was one of the company's traveling salesmen. He was one of those kind of gentle salesmen who knew his work and who knew just what to do to get customers. "I mourn for the old days," observed Billy Hough, when the Man in the Tower passed by. "Would that they could come back. The great days of the past of the old Watch Shop seem like a dream now that the old institution has passed out of existence. Who remembers the days of 30 years ago when Cardinal Gibbons visited the factory and left with a handsome gold watch, the gift of the then management of the concern. But why go on? I feel the tears coming, now. Good-bye and tell all my friends and ex-employees of the Watch Shop that Billy Hough wishes them good health and happiness for the remainder of their lives." Billy now lives in West Haven.

Little did the Tall Tower Man realize as he typed out a few lines Monday about the Democrat's carrier pigeons of many years ago and their fast flights from the National Guard camp at Niantic to this city that even then their owner was crossing the Great Divide. Early Tuesday morning the sad news came into the editorial room that Emil Floering had died at his home in Milford the previous day, the same day, the same day the Tower recalled the carrier pigeons. Mr. Floering lived on Summer street when the Democrat utilized this means of rapid transportation. There wasn't a better trainer of carrier pigeons around these parts than Emil Floering. And many of the old timers will vouch for that.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester O'Dell of Watertown will attend the sixteenth annual reunion of the Beach family to be held in Stratford on Labor Day at which time five generations of the famous family are expected. One hundred and ten persons, representing 37 families, all descendants of Charles Beach, a native of Trumbull are included in the organization. The Beach family claims the distinction of being one of the oldest in Fairfield County and traces its descent from the Beaches of England, the name being by no means rare in the history of that country. Three Beach brothers settled in Fairfield in 1639 and this branch of the family is descended from Ephraim Beach, a Revolutionary soldier whose children settled in Trumbull.

Behind the curtains. . . Billy O'Brien, Waterbury's famed Irish tenor, made a big hit with John Fogarty, silver-voiced tenor of WABC, last week. Fogarty was appearing at the Palace theater and during morning rehearsals had the local youth rehearsing in the microphone with him and was well pleased with the results. During each of Fogarty's showings before his appreciative Brass City audience Billy was behind stage watching with eager orbs each and every move made by his idol in putting his songs across. And believe me the National Broadcasting satellite certainly did that. Give me more like the South Dakotan and we'll spend more time in the theaters.

Good Night.

CONTRACT

BRIDGE

as the EXPERTS PLAY IT

BY WM. E. MCKENNEY

Secretary, American Bridge League

There are times on the defense when it is necessary for you to get rid of certain high cards—in other words, cash them and get them out of your hands so that the declarer cannot throw you in the lead at his convenience in order to force you to make a detrimental play. The following hand, played in the woman's contract pair championships at Asbury Park, is an example.

The Bidding

South, the declarer, opened the contract with one spade. North went to three spades and South held three no trump. North went to four spades.

The Play

The opening lead was the four of clubs which declarer won in dummy with the king. Two rounds of spades were taken, East showing out, which left West with the good queen.

The declarer could see that she had a losing spade, two losing hearts and a possible losing diamond. If she could set the fourth heart she could get rid of the losing diamond—or if West held the king of diamonds and could be forced to lead away from it, her contract could be made.

However, the declarer first tried for the heart break and led her ace of hearts. A small heart was then played and West waded in with the queen. This play practically assured the declarer that the heart suit would not break.

The West player was in the lead. If she had not failed to cash her queen of spades and had led a club, while if she leads a club the declarer will trump in dummy with the ace, return a small club, win with the queen and then lead a small spade, throwing West into the lead with the queen. Her situation would then be helpless.

If she leads a diamond, the declarer will win both the ace and queen, while if she leads a club the declarer will trump in dummy and discard a losing diamond. Now all she must do is to lose a heart trick and her contract for four odd is made.
